

Glenn Korff School of Music

The Glenn Korff School of Music in the Hixson-Lied College of Fine & Performing Arts at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln is a professional, comprehensive institution devoted to the advancement of music and dance, the preparation of the next generation of music and dance professionals and pedagogues, the generation of scholarship about music and dance, and service to the music and dance professions and their institutions in the region, state, nation and world. The music and dance faculty are an outstanding array of internationally acclaimed artists and scholars who care deeply about their students (more than 400 students are enrolled currently), who work in close collaboration to serve the mission of the Glenn Korff School of Music.

Students in the Glenn Korff School of Music may pursue a broad range of undergraduate and graduate degree options, including the Bachelor of Arts degree in Dance, the Bachelor of Arts degree in Music, the Bachelor of Music degree (BM), the Bachelor of Music Education degree (BME), the Master of Music degree (MM), the Doctor of Musical Arts (DMA), and the Doctor of Philosophy degree (Ph.D.). All degrees in the Glenn Korff School of Music are accredited fully by the National Association of Schools of Music and the National Association of Schools of Dance. Graduates of the Glenn Korff School of Music engage successfully in professional and graduate-study opportunities nationally and internationally.

In addition to its broad panorama of music degree options for majors, the Glenn Korff School of Music provides outstanding opportunities for general university students to pursue their love of music and their curiosity about it. These opportunities include participation (by audition) in any of the School's vocal and instrumental ensembles, including the world-famous Cornhusker Marching Band, and academic courses in the history of popular, jazz, rock, and world music. Minors in music include a popular option in Music Technology.
